

Air Con and refrigeration show

Managers and owners in the farming industry whose business depends on cost-effective refrigeration can get free advice from the UK's top cooling experts at a major national event in March.

ACR show sales manager
Iona Spencer

Vital updates for cooling equipment users on ways to reduce their costs and comply with new regulations are included in the seminar programme for the Air Conditioning and Refrigeration Show (ACR Show) 2012, which has just been announced.

It will include insights from the UK's big supermarkets on their plans to introduce very low carbon cooling solutions and radically change their approach to refrigeration and air conditioning. Other key topics include advice from industry experts on:

- how to cut refrigerant leaks from equipment and cut your costs;
- how to reduce cooling power to boost profits and reduce carbon;
- update on the latest cooling legislation, and how to comply.

The free seminars take place over the three days of the show at the NEC on 13-15 March 2012. ■

